Labour and Socialist International Wikipedia

The Labour and Socialist International (LSI; German: Sozialistische Arbeiter-Internationale, SAI) was an international organization of socialist and labour parties, active between 1923 and 1940. The group was established through a merger of the rival Vienna International and the former Second International, based in London, and was the forerunner of the present-day Socialist International.

The constructive side of syndicalism Arturo Giovanitti

The Constructive Side of Syndicalism. Its Nature and Aim. Like all the other new theories that have loomed up in the horizon on the troubled waters of capitalist society, or, for that matter, any society whatever, syndicalism is naturally going to be very much maligned, calumniated, and revolted against, not only by those that are not in

Towards a Syndicalist International the 1913 London Congress

A Syndicalist International: To Be or Not To Be? Contemporaries Assess the Congress This is from the book "The Workers Themselves": Revolutionary Syndicalism and International Labour, 1913-1923 by Wayne Thorpe. It's an excellent English language book. I found the book to be informative, with very interesting footnotes and cites.
