Rectoscopy Preparation and procedure of rectoscopy

Rectoscopy (or rectomanoscopy) is an endoscopic method for the diagnostic examination of the epithelium of the rectum, as well as, sometimes, the distal sections of the sigmoid colon. During rectoscopy, visual inspection of these intestinal parts is performed using a device called a rectoscope (or a rectoscope). The device is inserted through the patient's anus in the rectum and can examine the areas of the direct and sigmoid intestines with a distance of thirty to thirty-five centimeters

Rectoscopy includes the following range of examinations

Rectoscopy is a test allowing for endoscopy of the anus canal and rectum with the use of rectoscope - rigid instrument about 20 - 30 cm long and 2cm in diameter (rectoscopes for children about 1cm in diameter). The optical fibers supply the light known as 'cold illumination' to the rectoscope.
