Learning and Adaption in Multiagent Systems DASH Harvard

Abstract The goal of a self-interested agent within a multiagent system is to maximize its utility over time. In a situation of strategic interdependence, where the actions of one agent may affect the utilities of other agents, the optimal behavior of an agent must be conditioned on the expected behaviors of the other agents in the system.

Learning and Adaption in Multi-Agent Systems. This task is, however, more complex when the agent interacts with other agents that have potentially different capabilities and goals. The single-agent case is structurally different from the multi-agent case due to the added dimension of dynamic interactions between the adaptive agents.
