Matter at High Densities in Astrophysics Compact Stars

It is a modern review on matter at high densities and pressures in astrophysics from Hund's early contribution to present-day ideas. The relation between the equation of state and the structure of compact cosmic objects is discussed, and two main contributions deal with the equation of state of baryonic matter at nuclear densities and with the

How a USRA astrophysicist helped to advance the study of The state of cold, stable matter at ultra-high density remains one of the most important unsolved problems in subatomic physics. Neutron stars represent a density-temperature regime that can be explored in no other way. A neutron star's interior structure is captured, in a
