Highlights We apply exact multiobjective search techniques to large size realistic road maps. Blind search, a distance heuristic, and a precalculated heuristic are tested. Precalculation effort is shown to pay off and to improve over the other heuristics. Problems in maps with two objectives and up to one million nodes are solved.

Heuristic search strategies for multiobjective state space of the multiobjective heuristic function implies admissibility. This paper addresses two broad topics. The first is to study multiobjective state space search under two different types of heuristics, namely non-monotone and inadmissible heuristics. The other is to develop search strategies for the multiobjective framework that
