Processes of bioaccumulation the importance of chemical

Measurement of Chemical Speciation There has been considerable effort recently in determining the different organic/heavy metal associations in sea and estuarine waters. In the first instance this has been done from a purely analytical point of view to quantify the various forms. Nonetheless, the final objective has always been to assess the extent of interaction of heavy metals with

Chapter 13 Speciation in environmental analysis

Speciation analysis is usually concerned with the determination of metals and metalloids. Metals occur in widely different physicochemical forms in the different environmental compartments. Soluble trace metal species are mostly hydrated ions and organic or inorganic complexes. Organic matter in environmental aqueous systems comes largely from living organisms mainly as polypeptides and
